The Rooster Crowed at Midnight By Abigail Porterfield

Published by Livestock Literature, USA

This element of the source document is an image of a book cover. The line "The Rooster Crows at Midnight" never appears as text in the source document. It is only part of the image and is therefore unknown as text to the watermark embedding program. If the watermarking algorithm uses text lines as the medium to carry watermark info, it can not use the text lines that are part of the image for that purpose.

If a hardcopy of this page is scanned into image form, the text that was originally part of the image will be indistinguihable from the source text.

This book is the compelling story of a man, a woman, and the rooster they raised from a chick. It will make you think, cry, and cackle with laughter. This heartwarming tale is spun in a way that could only come from the hand of Abigail Porterfield. The acclaimed author of "One Flew Over the Chicken Coop", Ms. Porterfield has a descriptive style that lends itself to fowl of all kinds. Readers and critics alike agree that Ms. Porterfield has captured the very essence of the relationship between a family and its prized and cherished bird. One critic raved "I'll never eat another order of Chicken McNuggets again!" More ardent praise of a work of literature could not be expected.

This area is not classified as a block of text since it is actually a piece of an image and can not be manipulated by the textual watermarking algorithm.

This is the only block of text on this page that is available for watermarking. The other area that appears to be text is really part of an image and can't be used by the watermark embedding algorithm.

Consequently, it must not be considered to be text by the detection algorithm that is operating on a scanned image of the page.
